A small amount, say £10K, should be transferred to the British Go Association (perhaps the Castledine Trust?) for support of the third aim specified in T Mark's will:

"the provision of financial grants to young players to assist with living costs to enable them to study Go in the Far East for periods of up to two years"

This amount is purposefully relatively small, since the third aim was only added to provide something tangible as T Mark didn't have great expectations that we would be able to achieve a London Go Centre, but he didn't want to provide something that might be seen as a freebie.

and that the remainder of the funds should be transferred to the London Go Centre charity, subject to their changing the Constitution as proposed.
